In the year 1095, Pope Urban II called for a crusade to liberate the Holy Sepulchre from the hands of the Muslims. This call ignited a religious fervor across Europe, and soon thousands of knights and foot soldiers took up the cross and set out for the Holy Land.

The First Crusade was a success. The Crusaders captured Jerusalem in 1099 and established a Christian kingdom in the Holy Land. But the Muslims were not about to give up their holy city without a fight. They launched a series of counter-crusades, and the Crusaders were forced to fight for their survival.

The Crusades lasted for over two centuries. They were a time of great violence and bloodshed. But they also led to the development of new technologies and ideas. The Crusaders brought back to Europe new knowledge of mathematics, science, and medicine. They also helped to spread the ideals of chivalry and courtly love.
